Part 3 FEEDING INFANTS, YOUNG CHILDREN AND ADOLESCENTS

Feeding The Newborn And Infants ................................................................. 150-202
Feeding Young Children .................................................................................. 203-208
Diet For Adolescents .......................................................................................... 209-211
The Food Pyramid ............................................................................................... 212-214
Guest Article: Healthy Food Habits
Ms. Karen Anand ................................................................................................. 215-219

Part 4 KEEPING YOUR CHILD HEALTHY

Choosing A Paediatrician ................................................................................... 222-224
Proper Use Of Medicines .................................................................................... 225
Home Remedies ..................................................................................................... 226-235
A First Aid Kit .......................................................................................................... 236
The A-Z Of Childhood Illnesses ......................................................................... 237-434
Psychological Concerns ....................................................................................... 435-443
Managing A Hospital Stay ...................................................................................... 444-449
Emergencies ............................................................................................................. 450-451

Guest Article: Prayer And Your Child’s Health
Dr. Jer Master ......................................................................................................... 452-456

Guest Article: The Role of Nature Cure In Child Care
Dr. Anand Gokani .................................................................................................. 457-462

Guest Article: Homoeopathy: A Gentle Complementary System of Medicine – Dr. Sunil Anand ................................................................. 463-468

Guest Article: Ayurveda And Child Care
Dr. Ashwinikutamar A. Raut ................................................................................... 469-472

Guest Article: Congenital Heart Disease (CHD): Frequently Asked Questions – Dr. Bharat Dalvi ........................................................... 473-483

Part 5 KEEPING YOUR CHILD HAPPY AND SAFE

Healthy Habits ....................................................................................................... 486-490
Family Issues .......................................................................................................... 491-507
Prevention of Accidents ....................................................................................... 508-517
Keeping Children Entertained ............................................................................ 518-525
Spending The Holidays Together ......................................................................... 526-527
Important Addresses ............................................................................................ 529-530
Index ....................................................................................................................... 531-539

FOREWORD

My heart leaps up when I behold
A rainbow in the sky:
So it was when my life began;
So it is now I am a man . . .
The child is father of the man.

— William Wordsworth

What is put into the upbringing of a child could determine what he turns out to be as a man. Dr. Anand’s book goes beyond the mother and the child to the upbringing of a child and the making of a man or woman. To that task, the author brings to bear his gentle wisdom. He sees life steadily and sees it whole. He touches on all the essentials of child care.

He starts at the root, the pregnant mother, and goes back to her upbringing. Her diet, as a child, makes the healthy mother. The dignity we accord to the girl child will result in the next step from childhood, to adolescence, a period which can be difficult both for the young person and the parents.

He warns parents about being ‘too ambitious’ for their children, driving them not only to studies but to too many other activities. As one school principal so well put it:
“Today’s children do not seem to know what childhood is.”

He speaks of the influence of the parents’ way of life on the child and the value to the child of the time a parent devotes to him or her.

As Professor of Paediatrics at the T. N. Medical College and B. Y. L. Nair Charitable Hospital, Mumbai, he inspired a generation of students with his zeal and his concern not only for the well-being of the children they attended to, but also for society as a whole.

As a doctor, he was called upon repeatedly to attend to severely under-nourished babies who were fed on an improper proportion of milk powder and water by mothers who thought it was more healthy to feed their children with a bottle rather than the breast which Nature had equipped them to do. Many of these babies he could save, but when he could not save a child one day, he decided to launch his crusade against the ‘bottle culture’. This crusade has taken him to national and international fora. It also led him to the establishment of a consumer organisation devoted to health issues called ACASH (Association for Consumers Action on Safety and Health).

I have had the privilege of being close to Dr. Anand for 30 years and I know how on every occasion he has fought the battle in the interest of the child consumer, be it in India or abroad. As he did so, he has tried to summon love in his heart for the opponent without compromising on his principles.

Dr. Anand is distinguished not only for his knowledge, which is expected of a Fellow of the Royal College of Physicians, but even more so for the two principles that govern his life. They come from his strong spiritual background. The first is ‘Ishwar Arpan’, which means, whatever you do, do it as an offering — a service to the Lord.
When he examines a child, he does it with gratitude to God for the opportunity to serve Him. His second principle is ‘Prasad

CONTENTS

Foreword ................................................................. xiii-xv
Preface ................................................................. xvi-xvii
Acknowledgements ............................................... xviii-xix

Part 1 PREGNANCY, CHILDBIRTH AND THE NEWBORN
Planning A Baby .................................................... 2-4
Pregnancy ............................................................. 5-12
Making Preparations ............................................. 13-17
Labour And Delivery ............................................. 18-21
Management Of The Newborn In Hospital .......... 22-27
Normal Variations In A Newborn .................... 28-36
Care of the Newborn ........................................... 37-52
Guest Article: Holistic Bonding With Your Unborn
Dr. Geetanjali Shah ........................................... 53-57

Part 2 THE GROWING YEARS — FROM INFANCY TO ADOLESCENCE
Normal Growth And Development .................. 60-81
Immunisation ......................................................... 82-88
Behaviour At Different Ages ....................... 89-99
Meeting The Emotional Needs Of Children .... 100-122
Learning And Schooling ................................. 123-138
Guest Article: Getting Your Child Ready To Read
Dr. Vibha Krishnamoorthy .............................. 139-141
Guest Article: Parenting Adolescents
Dr. M. K. C. Nair ............................................. 142-147

xv

xi
Budhi’ — an attitude of acceptance of the result after having given one’s best. If a child is getting better under his care, he is grateful to the Lord. If the improvement is not as expected, he reviews the case and gives due consideration to other possibilities. If the situation demands, he is not shy to take another opinion.

The reader may recognise that no author could have written such a book had he not experienced the joy of a well-knit family life. His wife Asha, his sons, his daughters-in-law and, above all, his grandchildren have all given him priceless insights that have enriched this book. They may not have picked up the pen, but they too have written the book.

Dr. Anand’s earnestness, his transparent honesty and love for people, especially children, are apparent even at the first meeting with him. When giving me a report on our servant’s 6 month-old child who was taken to him for the first time, he said, ‘Dear Alvita is very weak. She needs...’ I asked myself, ‘How many doctors would think of or refer to their infant patients in such affectionate terms?’ But this is the man.

You can sometimes know a man through a word or words that spring spontaneously and frequently from him. Dr. Anand’s favourite word is ‘Love’. It is his love for the little Alvitas of life that has made him write this book.

I am delighted the first edition was such a success and it is appropriate that he has widened the canvas of the present edition as he explains in his Preface. He has put in this fresh effort because of his passion to create happy families in a happy world.

January 14, 2001

R. M. Lala